Philandering is the order of the day and night from the lounge porch at Ivehurst to the kitchen. But, after all, the Irish polo player. who has a reputation for fascinating every woman he meets, is by no means a blackguard, as he says, and it is only because a pretty, selfish girl loses her silly head over him and makes the worst of an innocent meeting in town, that he is placed momentarily in a false position with her ple in the play of being a rather bad lot. In other words, you see the so-called fast set hitting up a decidedly lively pace.

There can be no excuse for the members of the house party who go to the kitchen in their bathing suits at night. Their bad taste is equalled only by that of the servants who put together pieces of letters that have dropped into waste-paper baskets. Both in high and low stations of life there are things that the ordinary, decent-minded person cannot stand. The Hattons have made too much of these things.

However, the play is saved in the end by the honesty of the philanderer who finds himself a willing victim of the game he has been playing all along. Moreover, in this role Courtney Foote gives one of the most delightful performances that the sealon has revealed. He plays O'Keefe with an Irish charm of manner and speech remarkable in an English actor. Quite as good, in her own more or loss ingenuous way, is Juliet Day as "the baby vampire." No man can see her without realizing the perils of philandering. As the girl who finally winst the fascinating Irishman. Mary Sorvess is sincere but colorless. The French valet of O'Keefe, incorrigibily amorous, is made most amusing by Lee Carrillo, and Ida St. Leon does amorous, is made most amusing by Lee Carrillo, and Ida St. Leen does a neat bit of work as the parlor maid. Orlando Daly is funny as the awk-ward, simple-minded lover of "the baby vampire," and the acting gen-erally serves to make "Upstairs and Down" entertaining.

on the Second Avenue surface and Fourteenth Street crosstown lines was blocked for nearly an hour.

A Second Avenue trolley, south bound, in charge of motorman Frank Wilson, rammed the auto truck driven by Morris Rabinovita of No. 584 South Thirteenth Street, Newark, N. J. The truck was hurled against the touring car containing Benjamin Blerman of No. 184 Hillsdale Avenue, Newark, and Harry Scherier of No. 21 Webster Avenue, Jersey City. All in the touring car were thrown to the street.

Rocco Mazolino, a street sweeper, was struck by the light auto and hurled to the ground. The five were treated by Dr. Sirts of Bellevue Hospital for contusions of the head, body and hands.
